LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS OPEN DAY AT UCB

UCB held an open day in partnership with the London School of Economic (LSE) on 23rd September. The chief guest was Dr. James Abdey, Associate Professor in Statistics and Associate International Director at LSE. The event provided students with an in-depth overview of the prestigious University of London (UoL) degrees available at UCB, all of which teach the same world-class LSE curriculum that is studied by students in London.

Prof Hew Gill, President of UCB, opened the event with a speech explaining how international education gives Bangladeshi students the skills they need to succeed in their careers. Dr. James Abdey then made a presentation about how LSE designs its degree curriculums for students studying their degrees at UCB. He said, "The LSE crafts its degree curriculums to provide students with the essential skills and knowledge to thrive in the modern global economy. LSE is a top 10 university so students at UCB get the best possible international education in accounting, business, economics, finance, management, and all aspects of social sciences. It was a pleasure for me to meet so many aspiring students and to share how the LSE designed programmes at UCB unlock numerous global study and career opportunities."

LSE is number 6 in the QS World Ranking of Universities, so is among the very best universities in the world. Many LSE degrees are accredited by professional bodies such as ICA, CIMA, and ACCA so students may receive exemptions from professional exams when studying to become accounting, finance and data analytics professionals. UCB offers four full degrees designed and assessed by the LSE. Students can complete all three years of their degree at UCB and when they finish they can graduate in Dhaka or they can choose to receive their degree at the Graduation Convocation ceremony in London. The next UCB intake for the LSE designed degrees is on 14th October 2024.

UCB SCHOLAR AT LSE SUMMER SCHOOL BY RUBAYEET HASAN

Attending LSE Summer School as a UCB scholar for me was one of the best learning and "once in a lifetime" experiences. The welcoming students from all over the globe and the world class faculties made the student experience fantastic when you are studying in one of the top universities. The numerous hustling campus buildings in prime central London near the historic river Thames made the student experience incomparable and unbeatable.

My LSE Summer School course was AC110 Principles of Accounting, and I was delighted to achieve an A grade under the guidance of LSE's world-class lecturers and faculties. Staying in the LSE Passfield Hall student residence meant I was able to connect with other students at the LSE Summer School, and also experience the LSE hall life.

LSE being in central London, I was able to dive into one of the world's most historical and vast mega cities, with its vibrant blend of history and modernity, captivating iconic landmarks, and diverse neighborhoods. From the ancient Tower of London, close to Tower Bridge (often wrongly known to tourists as London Bridge), to the well-known Buckingham Palace, the city invited exploration at every turn. With world-class museums and a dynamic culinary scene, there was always something new for me to discover.

Outside London I was able to discover other amazing towns and cities of the UK like Bath, Cardiff, Bristol and more. My time as an UCB scholar at LSE will always remain in my heart as a great memory forever. Thanks to Universal College Bangladesh, my local University of London-LSE registered teaching centre, and to the senior management team for transforming my dream into a reality.

Once all the reviews were gathered, they were made into colorful posters and presented on the Level 06 display wall, in the Student Lounge & Cafeteria. His experiences resonated deeply with the students, making the celebration even more meaningful.

WORLD PEACE DAY

Universal College Bangladesh celebrated World Peace Day on Saturday, September 24th, 2024. The day was all about reflecting on peace and encouraging students to think about how they can bring peace into their lives and communities. It was a wonderful opportunity for everyone to come together and share their thoughts.

Before the event, students were invited to express their ideas about peace by either writing or drawing on postcards. These postcards were filled with messages, symbols, and creative artwork, all showing personal reflections on what peace means to them. The finished pieces were beautifully displayed in the UCB Library & Resource Centre where students could stop, admire, and engage with ideas.

During the celebration, students also had the chance to discuss their postcards with Prof. Hew Gill, President of UCB, when he visited the exhibition. Students shared what inspired their creations, and Prof. Hew, in return, shared his own insights and experiences, which made the conversations even more enriching. His words encouraged the students to think more deeply about peace and how small actions can lead to bigger positive changes.

As students viewed the display, many took the time to read the reflections and discuss them with their peers. The variety of thoughts and artwork sparked conversations about the diverse ways we can promote peace in our communities. The display not only highlighted the creativity of the students but also encouraged a deeper understanding of the value of peace.

The painting that won the first place highlighted the duality of democratic progress, by celebrating the origin of the United States of America, while also emphasizing the need for justice. The artwork placed second, featured a vibrant design with red and blue elements, underscoring the centrality of individual engagement in democratic processes by casting a personal vote. Third prize went to a picture incorporating decorative elements like plants to symbolize the growth of democracy through active participation in the voting process.
